Executive Summary

This report, a review of counties' policies and practices with respect to Immigration and Customs Enforcement ("ICE") detainees,<sup>1</sup> indicates that Pennsylvania is significantly shifting away from honoring such requests from ICE. The review also revealed other questions, necessitating further inquiry, concerning ways in which Pennsylvania counties interact with ICE.

Recent court decisions have influenced how counties treat ICE detainees. In Pennsylvania, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals recently decided a case involving Ernesto Galarza, a U.S. citizen who was held erroneously for four days because of an ICE detainer.<sup>2</sup> The Third Circuit concluded that ICE detainees were merely requests rather than a command from the federal government.<sup>3</sup> Under certain circumstances, local law enforcement agencies can thus be held liable for choosing to imprison someone on the sole basis of this request from ICE. As a result of this decision, Lehigh County, Pennsylvania, changed its policy such that it no longer holds individuals based solely on an ICE detainer. Other federal courts have similarly ruled that an ICE detainer is not mandatory,<sup>4</sup> meaning that local authorities cannot use it as a defense for an otherwise unlawful detention.

Local communities are also organizing against ICE detainees. In Philadelphia, for example, a group of community-based organizations, the Philadelphia Family Unity Network (PFUN), campaigned to change the City's policy with respect to ICE detainees.<sup>5</sup> They met with city officials, presented their proposal, and organized city council support. Their work culminated in City Council hearings that brought out hundreds of supporters. On April 16, 2014, the Mayor of Philadelphia issued an Executive Order declaring that local law enforcement would no longer honor ICE detainees.<sup>6</sup>

These changes are not isolated to Pennsylvania.<sup>7</sup> State laws and policies in California,<sup>8</sup> Colorado,<sup>9</sup> Connecticut,<sup>10</sup> and Rhode Island<sup>11</sup> have been enacted to limit local law enforcement agencies' compliance with ICE detainees. City and county policies now similarly limit the reach

What Are Immigration Detainers?

As part of the Department of Homeland Security, ICE is responsible for enforcing federal immigration laws.

ICE relies on cooperation with local law enforcement agencies for federal immigration enforcement. One of the ways ICE works with local law enforcement is by sending them an immigration detainer or "hold," also known as an ICE detainer. An ICE detainer is a form that requests a local law enforcement agency to hold an individual suspected of being present in violation of federal immigration laws for up to forty-eight hours after the individual would normally be released.

This extra time allows ICE to dispatch an agent to take custody of the individual for possible deportation. ICE is not required to obtain court approval prior to issuing a detainer. It may issue a detainer if it merely suspects that an individual is violating immigration laws.

of ICE detainees in Arizona, D.C., Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Oregon, Washington, and Wisconsin.<sup>12</sup>

This report is the first to provide a comprehensive picture of how the 67 counties in Pennsylvania are currently handling ICE detainees (Appendix A – Pennsylvania Counties Map). It is based on conversations with dozens of local officials and numerous requests under the Pennsylvania Right to Know Law. Overall, the Sheller Center found that the trend in counties in Pennsylvania is toward refusing to honor ICE detainees, often pursuant to a written policy. At the same time, there are a smaller number of counties that continue to honor ICE detainees, although a few of those counties’ policies and practices are currently under review. A handful of counties reported no interactions with ICE or otherwise refused to provide us with information (Appendix B – At-A-Glance: Pennsylvania Counties & ICE Detainers).

The Sheller Center also found that a county’s policy or practice of not honoring ICE detainees did not necessarily indicate how a county otherwise interacted with ICE. Some counties had written policies that prohibited holding individuals based on an ICE detainer but still promoted collaboration with ICE in other respects. Some did so by providing advance notification to ICE before the individual’s release date or holding onto individuals for additional hours for ICE to pick up while still “technically” releasing them on their release date. A few counties also regularly sent lists of incarcerated individuals to ICE or provided ICE with access to their facilities. In contrast, several counties moved away from such ICE collaboration by prohibiting any sort of cooperation with ICE for the “enforcement of civil immigration law.” This report includes information from county officials about these various relationships with ICE because they are important to understanding local counties’ approach to the overall issue of federal immigration enforcement.

This report also documents, to the extent ascertainable from responses from county officials and written policies, the motivations behind counties’ policies and practices with respect to ICE detainees. Some officials reported that their counties changed their policies in response to the Third Circuit decision in Galarza. Other county officials stated that they believed that they were required to comply with federal law and appeared uninformed about the potential legal consequences of holding individuals based solely on an ICE detainer. A few counties had policies and practices related to ICE detainees that responded to concerns about the limitations of local county resources.

The Sheller Center concludes that continued education about the Galarza decision can help influence counties on the issue of ICE Detainers. While the movement towards refusing to honor ICE detainees continues, many counties will continue to collaborate informally with ICE. Such interactions suggest the importance of continued community involvement in shaping broader county policies and practices concerning federal immigration enforcement.

Recently, President Obama announced executive action on immigration reform, which includes modifying the priorities of enforcement.<sup>13</sup> His new Priority Enforcement Program includes limiting the use of ICE detainees to “special circumstances”<sup>14</sup> or issuing them only if supported by a final deportation order or probable cause of deportability.<sup>15</sup> Though this new policy still gives ICE discretion to issue detainees, they may be limited to certain situations that have yet to be defined. This new policy is also subject to political challenges including a potential reversal of policy from a new administration or Congress.<sup>16</sup> Given these uncertainties, there is no telling how many ICE detainees will be issued in the future. In short, ICE detainees remain relevant to the conversation about local governmental entities and their involvement in enforcing federal immigration law.

Methodology

Before this study, there was no statewide review of Pennsylvania counties' policies and practices relating to ICE detainees. In August 2014, the Sheller Center met with the ACLU-PA and PICC to provide assistance in determining what was happening at a county level with local law enforcement and ICE detainees. On August 13, 2014, the ACLU-PA and PICC, in coordination with Juntos, a local Latino rights organization, sent a letter and survey to county officials throughout Pennsylvania asking about their current policies and practices (Appendix C – Letter, Survey, & Sample Policy). In collaboration with these organizations, the Sheller Center contacted county officials throughout Pennsylvania to follow up on these requests for information.

This report is based on conversations with dozens of local officials. These officials include sheriffs, prison officials, records administrators, commissioners, district attorneys, solicitors, and others. As part of this research effort, the Sheller Center sent out numerous requests to counties under the Pennsylvania Right to Know Law, requesting their written policies regarding ICE detainees.

Out of sixty-three counties within Pennsylvania with correctional facilities, we obtained information about how fifty-one counties treat ICE detainees. We lack sufficient information to categorize how twelve counties treat ICE detainees.

There are a few caveats to the information worth noting. The Sheller Center based its report, in part, on information that was orally provided by county officials. It is possible that a particular county official may have been misinformed about the practices in her county. Further, a couple of counties provided information about written policies or practices that conflicted with reports we received about individual experiences on the ground. Finally, a number of counties reported that their current policies or practices were under review. This report captures the landscape as of the time of writing, and the information contained within may change in the coming months and years.

Findings on County Policies and Practices

Our research revealed that the counties in Pennsylvania vary widely in their policies and practices regarding ICE detainees. In this section, we detail our findings about how counties respond to ICE detainees. We categorized the information as follows: (1) counties that did not honor ICE detainees pursuant to a written policy or practice; (2) counties that honored ICE detainees pursuant to a written policy or practice; and (3) counties that could not be categorized by how they treat ICE detainees.

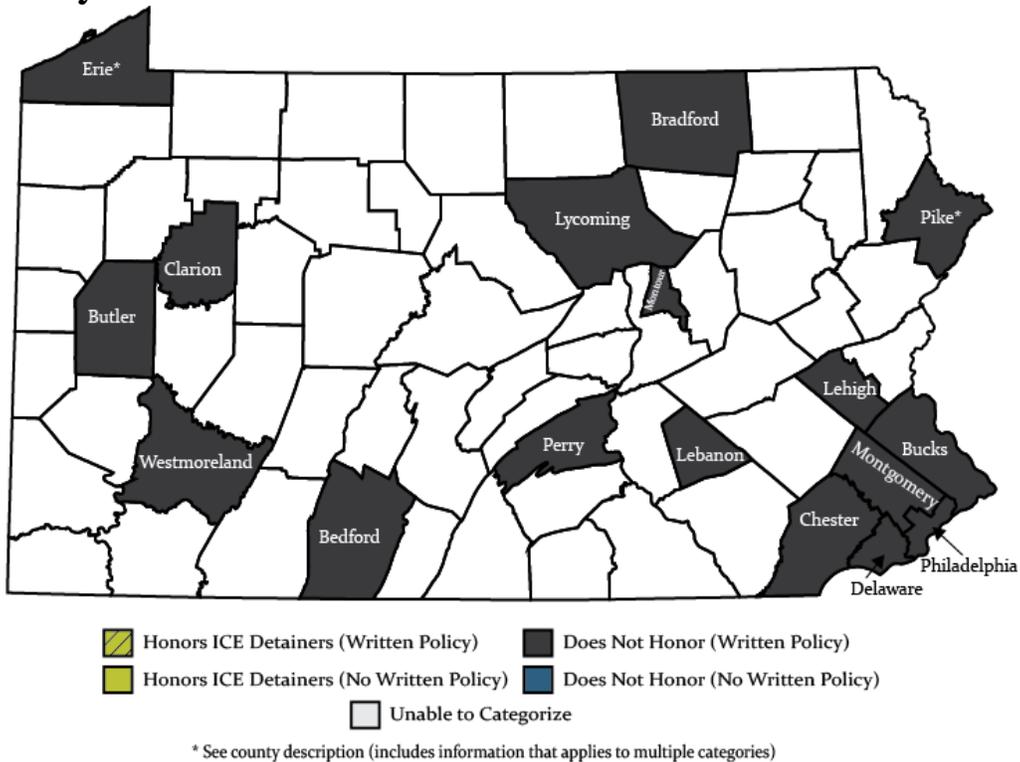

When categorizing counties as having a written policy, we considered anything in writing that specifically explained what local law enforcement does when it receives an ICE detainee to be a written policy. Some examples include email directives issued by county officials, interoffice memoranda sent between county officials, and formal prison or jail policies.

Apart from describing more fully each county's written policy or practice with respect to ICE detainees, we also note the source of the information and any other relevant information. Other relevant information may include a county's policy or practice for reporting suspected undocumented immigrants to ICE, ICE's presence and/or relationship with the county, and the county's possible motivations for honoring or not honoring ICE detainees. As a point of comparison, we include information about the number of ICE detainees issued to each county detention facility from October 2011 to August 2013.<sup>17</sup>

Finally, we describe the limited information we have on the remaining counties. A few counties did not have their own local county facilities and sent arrested individuals to nearby county facilities. Other counties failed to supply any meaningful information about their policies and practices with respect to ICE detainees.

An overall summary of these findings are contained in a Pennsylvania Counties Map (Appendix A) and an At-A-Glance Summary: Pennsylvania Counties (Appendix B).

County Does Not Honor ICE Detainers: Written Policy

BEDFORD COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY:	Yes. Dated September 15, 2014, the policy states: “Because of Galarza v. Szalczk [sic]...the Bedford County Correctional Facility [(BCCF)] will no longer hold inmates solely on ICE detainees. If an ICE agent places a detainer on an inmate incarcerated in the BCCF the records officer is to contact ICE and inform them of a probable release date and that Bedford County will not hold them without a court order authorized by a judge.”
PRACTICE:	Confirmed written policy. The facility tries to provide as much notice as possible to ICE regarding the probable release date.
SOURCE:	Right to Know, County Official
NO. OF DETAINERS:	8 (issued from Oct. 2011–Aug. 2013)

BRADFORD COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY:	Yes. Dated June 16, 2014, Bradford County Correctional Facility's policy states: "[W]e will no longer hold inmates solely for immigration and customs detainers. If an inmate has a detainer sent in from immigration and customs the intake officer is to call immigration and customs and ask for further information and paperwork. If immigration and customs has a criminal warrant or criminal conviction, request that they send the paperwork to us to legally hold the person. If nothing further exists [sic] and they just sent the detainer it is not to be granted, if the person is eligible for release they are to be released and not held solely for the detainer."
PRACTICE:	Confirmed written policy. The facility does not reach out to ICE itself.

BUCKS COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY:	Yes. Effective April 15, 2014, Bucks County Department of Corrections' new policy states: "ICE detainers have no authority to commit, detain or retain an offender in custody within the Bucks County Dept. of Corrections. Bucks County Department of Corrections will not accept a new commitment solely on an ICE detainer. Records office staff will notify ICE via email of a pending release from custody (bail, parole, purge, etc.). The email should state the release is in progress. . . . An Ice [sic] detainer will not detain an inmate or delay a release from incarceration."
PRACTICE:	Confirmed written policy.
OTHER INFORMATION:	County official stated change in policy was to comply with "current case law changes."

BUTLER COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY: Yes. Effective September 9, 2014, Butler County Prison’s policy is “to not accept I.C.E. detainees as the sole holding or committing authority of any inmate(s).”

PRACTICE: Confirmed written policy.

OTHER INFORMATION: One county official stated that the policy changed to comply with Galarza. The policy also states: “[u]nless acting pursuant to a court order or a legitimate law enforcement purpose, that is unrelated to the enforcement of a civil immigration law, the Butler County Prison shall not permit I.C.E. agents access to prison facilities or to any person in custody for investigative interviews or other investigative purposes, or use on duty time or Butler County Prison resources responding to I.C.E. inquiries or communicating with I.C.E. regarding an inmate’s custody status or release date.”

SOURCE: County Official

NO. OF DETAINERS: 8 (issued from Oct. 2011–Aug. 2013)

CHESTER COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY: Yes. Dated May 1, 2014, Chester County Prison (CCP) policy states it “will accept ICE detainees served by ICE agents on a suspected illegal alien” but “will not detain individuals or maintain continuing custody solely based on an ICE detainee.” CCP will notify ICE that the subject is being processed for release. “If ICE agents do not respond to assume custody or contact cannot be made, then the subject is to be released from CCP custody.”

PRACTICE: Confirmed written policy.

OTHER INFORMATION: CCP’s policy states: “CCP will allow ICE agents access to daily population reports and other records for investigative purposes.”

ERIE COUNTY*

WRITTEN POLICY:	Yes. In a memo dated October 1, 2014, Erie County will not hold any individuals based on the standard I-247 ICE detainer form.
OTHER INFORMATION:	Erie County Jail has a contract with ICE to hold individuals who are in federal custody pending immigration proceedings. Erie County Jail will send a list of currently held individuals upon request to ICE. Erie County also allows members of ICE to inspect the jail at any time and ride-along with local law enforcement. Most pick-ups for ICE in Erie County are made by Customs and Border Patrol (CBP) at a Border Patrol station within the county.
SOURCE:	Right to Know, County Official
NO. OF DETAINERS:	12 (issued from Oct. 2011–Aug. 2013)
*NOTES:	Erie County’s memo states that it will hold individuals if they receive from ICE an I-203 Order to Detain form along with the I-200 Warrant of Arrest.

LEBANON COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY:	Yes. Dated August 28, 2008, Lebanon County Correctional Facility’s policy states that the facility will no longer hold individuals based solely on ICE detainers.
PRACTICE:	No additional information available.
OTHER INFORMATION:	While the Lebanon County Correctional Facility does not honor ICE detainers, it has two clerks who report weekly to ICE about their newly incarcerated individuals. The facility also allows ICE access to their facility and their records.
SOURCE:	Right to Know

LEHIGH COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY:	Yes. Dated April 14, 2014, Lehigh County’s policy states: “Once the subject of the detainer is not otherwise detained, the Lehigh County Department of Corrections shall release the subject of the detainer from County custody, unless the Lehigh County Department of Corrections receives a judicially-issued detainer, warrant or order.”
OTHER INFORMATION:	The county’s new policy also states: “[t]o the extent practicable under the circumstances, the Lehigh County Department of Corrections shall advise the applicable federal agency of the date and time when the subject of the detainer shall not otherwise be detained, so as to permit the federal agency the opportunity to assume custody.”
SOURCE:	County of Lehigh, Pennsylvania Resolution No. 2014-36

LYCOMING COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY:	Yes. A memo from the prison, dated October 20, 2014, states that the Lycoming County prison will not hold individuals based on ICE detainers alone. It further states that if a person in their custody is scheduled for release, and ICE has issued a Detainer, they will notify ICE two hours prior to the inmates release, so that ICE will have a chance to pick up the individual prior to release.
OTHER INFORMATION:	When there are any questions regarding a prisoner’s immigration status, the Prison calls a local ICE agent.
SOURCE:	Right to Know, County Official

MONTGOMERY COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY:	Yes. Dated April 28, 2014, Montgomery County Correctional Facility’s policy states “it will not accept or hold anyone who has been brought into the facility on charges but who has satisfied the bail requirements on the charges. Importantly, MCCF will not hold the person for the up to 48hr period noted on 2010 ICE detainer request form despite the fact that the form indicates that MCCF can do so.” The facility will not accept “anyone being brought to it solely on an ICE detainer or possible ICE detainer.”
PRACTICE:	Confirmed written policy.
OTHER INFORMATION:	Drafted new policy in light of Galarza . A county official confirmed that the facility has daily contact with ICE. MCCF’s policy further states: “...this policy is unrelated to 2012 Intergovernmental Service Agreement between the Department of Homeland Security, U.S. Immigrations and Custom Enforcement, Enforcement and Removal Operations and the Montgomery County Correctional Facility - wherein persons are being transported by Federally authorized and identified ICE/ERO personnel to assure attendance through the administrative hearing process.” Non-U.S. citizens are further advised of their right to contact their consulate.

MONTOUR COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY:	Yes. Dated October 16, 2014, Montour County Prison’s policy states: “Montour County does not honor ICE detainees, as set forth by law.”
PRACTICE:	No additional information available.
SOURCE:	Right to Know
NO. OF DETAINERS:	No data available

PERRY COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY:	Yes. Dated October 22, 2014, Perry County Prison’s policy states: “County officials shall not detain any individual at the request of U.S. Immigrations and Customs Enforcement (ICE) unless ICE first presents the county with a judicially issued warrant or order authorizing such detention. In particular, County officials shall not arrest, detain, or transport anyone solely on basis of an immigration detainer or an administrative warrant.”
PRACTICE:	No additional information available.
OTHER INFORMATION:	Perry County Prison’s policy also states, “[u]nless acting pursuant to a court order or a legitimate law enforcement purpose that is unrelated to the enforcement of a civil immigration law, no County official shall permit ICE agents access to County facilities or to any person in County custody.”

County Honors ICE Detainers: Written Policy

BERKS COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY:	Yes. Dated May 9, 2014, an email directive from a Berks County Jail official states: “ICE Officers will no longer have two business days to transport an inmate once all open charges are discharged. They will only have 4 hours from the time you notify them that the inmate is turned over into their custody and ready for transport to pick them up.”
PRACTICE:	No additional information available.
OTHER INFORMATION:	Under the current directive, a supervisor within the jail system receives notification every time an individual is turned over to ICE. Berks County Jail is currently drafting a more formal “procedure update” regarding ICE detainers. Berks County Jail has a contract with ICE to hold individuals who are in federal custody pending immigration proceedings.
SOURCE:	Right to Know, County Official

NORTHAMPTON COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY:	Yes. Dated June 30, 2014, the Northampton County Department of Corrections' policy provides that they will hold individuals based solely on an ICE detainer for up to 48 hours.
PRACTICE:	No additional information available.
OTHER INFORMATION:	County provides notice to the individual of the ICE detainer and the officer on duty "will ensure that the inmate will have access to the phones" to use the contact number on the detainer form. If the named individual claims the detainer is in error, the facility must follow a procedure to contact ICE to confirm the status of the individual and the detainer request. The policy also states that ICE obtains a list of "new inmates," determines who they want to "interview" in person, and "obtain[s] a new set of fingerprints."

County Honors ICE Detainers: No Written Policy

ADAMS COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY: None

PRACTICE: Adams County Correctional Complex’s practice is to hold individuals based solely on ICE detainers. The facility will hold an individual on an ICE detainer for up to forty-eight hours.

OTHER INFORMATION: Each day, the facility sends a list to ICE of all individuals processed into the facility. Current ICE detainer practice is under review. At least one county official shared his understanding that the Third Circuit Court of Appeals ruling in Galarza indicates requests from ICE do not have the same force of law and impose no obligation to detain an individual.

CLINTON COUNTY

WRITTEN POLICY:	None
PRACTICE:	Clinton County Correctional Facility’s practice is to hold individuals based solely on ICE detainees.
OTHER INFORMATION:	Clinton County Correctional Facility has a contract with ICE to hold individuals who are in federal custody pending immigration proceedings. This location is most often used as a transfer facility for individuals who have been detained by ICE in other counties. ICE is in this facility five days a week, eight hours per day. A county official, who was unsure of how the system exactly worked, mentioned that individuals within the facility without social security numbers come to the attention of “in house ICE personnel.”

Unable to Categorize

The remaining counties cannot be categorized by how they treat ICE detainees. Four counties in Pennsylvania do not have their own local county facilities: Cameron, Fulton, Juniata, and Sullivan. These counties send arrested individuals to nearby county facilities. Apart from these counties, the remaining counties failed to supply sufficient information for several reasons. First, county officials sometimes refused to cooperate with our inquiries for information. Second, these counties also denied having written policies related to ICE detainees in response to our Right to Know requests. Finally, a few counties did not have any meaningful information about their policies and practices with respect to ICE detainees.

Counties Without Facilities
Cameron	Fulton	Juniata	Sullivan

Counties That Have Supplied Insufficient Information
Allegheny	Dauphin	Indiana	McKean
Crawford	Greene	Lancaster	Northumberland
Cumberland	Huntingdon	Lawrence

As a point of comparison, when looking at the data of ICE detainees issued to these county facilities in Pennsylvania from October 2011 to August 2013, from highest to lowest were Allegheny (119), Dauphin (107), and Lancaster (66), Cumberland (35), Huntingdon (5), Lawrence (3), and Northumberland (2).<sup>18</sup> The remaining counties have no data available as to whether ICE detainees were issued to their county facilities during that time period.

Overall Observations

ICE Detainer Policies and Practices

The overall trend in Pennsylvania counties is towards refusing to honor ICE detainers. In 2014, fourteen counties created written policies requiring their officials to refuse to honor ICE detainers. A number of counties without written policies nonetheless reported not honoring ICE detainers and the drafting of written policies to codify that practice. Other counties with practices of honoring ICE detainers stated that their current practice is under review. Several county officials reported that the letter and accompanying information package sent by PICC, ACLU-PA, and JUNTOS prompted them to

Bucks County

A county official indicated the county does not honor ICE detainers in order to comply with the Third Circuit's decision in Galarza. The official recognized that Lehigh County was subject to significant penalty as result of their actions and the case. The official also understood that an ICE detainer is considered a request under the Third Circuit ruling.

Armstrong County

A county official indicated the county jail does not honor ICE detainers because the federal government did not reimburse the county's costs at the desired rate. Furthermore, the official stated the facility typically operates at capacity, so space restricts the county's ability to hold additional individuals.

begin drafting ICE detainer policies. Most county officials who volunteered their motivation for changing their policy stated that the major impetus was the Third Circuit Court of Appeals' decision in Galarza and the resulting liability that Lehigh County faced in the case. A few counties we contacted had adopted policies and practices refusing to honor ICE detainers many years ago. They reported adopting such policies and practices because of the failure to receive reimbursement for holding individuals for ICE and the limited bed space at their facilities.

In those counties that honor ICE detainers, the motivations were less clear. Several counties explained that they believed they were following the law by complying with ICE detainers. It is unclear whether these counties were unaware of the Third Circuit Court of Appeals' decision in Galarza. Other counties reformulated their policies and practices to honor ICE detainers in light of Galarza in ways they perceived to reduce the likelihood of liability. Instead of refusing to honor ICE holds, Northampton County provided "safeguards" to ensure the basis for the detainer was correct. Berks County still held individuals pursuant to an ICE detainer for retrieval by ICE, but had reduced that holding time to four hours.

Given the diversity of population size and composition in Pennsylvania counties, it was unsurprising that several counties reported little or no experience with ICE detainers. For some counties, the absence of a county prison or jail made the issue moot. For other counties, small numbers of local immigrants limited law enforcement agencies' interaction with and knowledge of the ICE detainer program. Due to their inexperience, these counties had little prior impetus to create an ICE detainer policy or practice.

Beyond the different understandings of ICE detainees by county officials across Pennsylvania, even within counties, the information we gathered from county officials was occasionally divergent at times. In these few instances, county officials sometimes reported practices that were inconsistent with written policies or with the reports of other officials within that county. Thus, policies and practices within a county were not necessarily uniformly implemented throughout the county, which suggests a need for counties to train personnel about their policies and practices regarding ICE detainees, especially if the policy or practice had been recently changed.

Collaboration with ICE

Detainers are part of a larger story in Pennsylvania about counties and their collaboration with ICE. Even among counties that had changed their policies or practices to not honor ICE

Bucks County

Bucks County prison officials will notify ICE via email about the pending release of any individual from custody.

detainers, a number continued to collaborate in ways that enabled ICE to assume custody of the individual named in the ICE detainer. Some counties did so by carving out a prohibition for ICE detainees to avoid legal liability while continuing other efforts to coordinate with ICE. Others actively communicated with ICE to provide information about the probable release date or provided as much advance notification as possible about the release of an individual so ICE may assume custody.

In contrast, some counties that prohibited compliance with ICE detainees did not otherwise affirmatively seek to notify ICE of the release of individuals or appear to collaborate with ICE. A couple of counties took a more aggressive stand against collaboration with ICE. They refused ICE agents access to their facilities and limited cooperation of local personnel with ICE in providing information about individuals within their facilities.

Butler County

Butler County's written policy expressly prohibits ICE agents physical access to the prison or individuals in custody for investigative purposes. The policy also prohibits the use of county resources for communicating with ICE regarding inmates.

In collecting the information for this report, we also sometimes learned about how counties collaborated with ICE apart from their policies and practices relating to the ICE detainer. As discussed above, a county's position to not honor ICE detainers did not necessarily mean that the county otherwise refused to collaborate with ICE. Apart from ICE detainers, counties explained the ways in which they collaborated with ICE to transfer custody of individuals suspected of being present in violation of federal immigration laws. Counties, for example, reported that they:

- Had regular informal contact with ICE
- Shared, on a regular basis, a list with ICE of individuals processed into the facility
- Authorized ICE to be regularly present in the facility
- Provided ICE with access to individuals in their facility
- Notified ICE about individuals they suspected of being foreign born
- Permitted ICE agents to ride-along with officers

It is unclear whether counties that currently honor ICE detainers, if convinced to revise their policies, would otherwise change the ways in which they collaborate with ICE to help identify and take custody of individuals.

Conclusion

Pennsylvania counties are moving away from honoring ICE detainees, reflecting the larger national movement.<sup>19</sup> A number of counties that now refuse to honor ICE detainees reported that these changes were undertaken in order to comply with the Third Circuit Court of Appeals' decision in Galarza and to avoid the possibility of legal liability. Some counties reported that they were prompted by the information provided by PICC, ACLU-PA, and JUNTOS. The vast majority of counties that adopted written policies refusing to honor ICE detainees did so in 2014. Continued education about the impact of Galarza, therefore, could be significant to bringing about county changes to ICE detainer policies and practices

Changes in detainer policies, however, do not answer the question of how counties will collaborate with ICE in the future. Many counties that officially refuse to comply with ICE detainees nonetheless continue to cooperate with ICE to take custody of individuals. On the other hand, several counties that have changed their policy to not honor ICE detainees are now also refusing any kind of collaboration with ICE.

When counties review their ICE detainer policies and practices, it provides an opportunity for community members and policymakers to discuss the implications of broader policies and practices involving local interaction with ICE, including the limitations of local resources available for federal civil immigration enforcement. Community involvement will be essential, not only to educate counties that still honor ICE detainees about Galarza and the liability they could face, but also to shape the discussion about broader county policies and practices concerning ICE collaboration. Given the potentially changing national landscape on federal immigration enforcement, communities have a historic opportunity to help Pennsylvania counties understand the impacts of their current policies and practices.

Re: County Liability for Honoring ICE detainers

Dear [Name of County] County Officials,

We are writing to alert you to the March 3, 2014 decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit in Galarza v. Szalczyk et al., No. 12-3991, 2014 WL 815127 (3d Cir. Mar. 4, 2014), in which the court ruled that when a local law enforcement agency imprisons someone on the sole basis of an ICE detainer request, it can be held liable for damages for constitutional violations. This ruling is binding law in Pennsylvania.

Since the Galarza decision, Philadelphia and Lehigh County have adopted policies prohibiting the imprisonment of anyone based solely on an ICE detainer request. We ask that you fill out the attached survey on your county's current detainer policies and practices. We have enclosed a self-addressed, stamped envelope for your convenience, and would appreciate your response by September 1.

If your county does not have a detainer policy consistent with current federal law, we urge you to adopt a policy prohibiting all County facilities from complying with any ICE detainer requests unless such detainers are accompanied by a judicial warrant backed by probable cause, as required by the Fourth Amendment. A model policy is enclosed for your review.

About Detainers

An ICE detainer (also known as an "ICE hold" or an "immigration hold") is a notice sent by ICE to a state or local law enforcement agency or detention facility to notify the agency that ICE is interested in a person in the agency's custody, and to request that the agency hold that person for up to 48 hours, excluding weekends and federal holidays, after the person is otherwise entitled to be released from the criminal justice system (for example, after posting bail), giving ICE extra time to decide whether to take the person into federal custody for administrative proceedings in immigration court.

A detainer is not an arrest warrant. Unlike genuine criminal warrants, which are supported by a determination of probable cause, it is unclear what evidentiary standard ICE uses when deciding whether to issue a detainer. In addition, while warrants are issued by a judicial officer, ICE detainers are issued by ICE enforcement agents themselves, without any authorization or oversight by a judge or any other neutral decisionmaker. And there is no clear, expeditious method for challenging a detainer or getting the detainer lifted or cancelled once it has been issued. This lack of basic Fourth Amendment protections in the ICE detainer context explains why ICE has mistakenly issued detainers for so many U.S. citizens and non-removable immigrants.

Although ICE benefits from the misperception that ICE detainers are mandatory orders to detain someone, in fact, ICE detainers are non-binding requests. Federal agencies and courts, including ICE itself and the federal appeals court in Pennsylvania, have acknowledged that local law enforcement are never required to hold anyone based on an ICE detainer without an accompanying warrant or a court order.

Since ICE detainers are merely requests, state and local law enforcement agencies and detention facilities open themselves up to legal liability for making the decision to detain an individual—for any length of time—based solely on an ICE detainer request.

Galarza v. Szalczyk, et al.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit recently held that local detention facilities can be held liable, right alongside ICE, for constitutional violations if a wrongfully detained person decides to sue. See Galarza v. Szalczyk et al., No. 12-3991, 2014 WL 815127 (3d Cir. Mar. 4, 2014). This ruling arose out of a federal lawsuit filed in 2010 by the ACLU and ACLU of Pennsylvania on behalf of Ernesto Galarza, a New Jersey-born U.S. citizen of Puerto Rican descent who was held illegally for three days in the Lehigh County Prison pursuant to an ICE detainer. After Mr. Galarza was arrested (on charges of which he was later acquitted), Allentown police notified ICE of Mr. Galarza's arrest, believing, due to his ethnicity, that he might be an undocumented immigrant. ICE then issued a detainer asking Lehigh County Prison to continue holding Mr. Galarza after he posted bail so that ICE could investigate his immigration status. So when Mr. Galarza posted bail the day after his arrest, he was not released. Instead, he was held in prison for three additional days, without any explanation as to why he was still being detained or opportunity to demonstrate his citizenship, before being interviewed by ICE and released.

In October 2012, most of the defendants in the case paid Mr. Galarza to settle his claims. But the trial court dismissed Mr. Galarza's claims against Lehigh County, ruling that the County could not be held liable for violating his rights because it had no choice but to honor the ICE detainer. Mr. Galarza appealed the dismissal of the County, and won. On March 4, 2014, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit held that ICE detainers are merely requests to detain someone, and that because local agencies are not required to comply with ICE detainers, they may be held liable for their role in causing an unlawful detention when there is no constitutionally valid basis for the detainer. Lehigh County subsequently settled with Mr. Galarza and passed a resolution prohibiting its facilities from honoring ICE detainees without a judicial warrant.

Many other localities around the country have been forced to expend resources defending civil rights litigation and pay financial settlements to people who were unlawfully held on ICE detainees. Allegheny County is currently defending a federal lawsuit filed by the ACLU of Pennsylvania on behalf of Angelica Davila, another U.S. citizen who was unlawfully imprisoned overnight by the Allegheny County Jail based on an ICE detainer request.<sup>1</sup>

Growing Trend of Refusing to Comply with ICE detainer Requests

In light of the many concerns raised by ICE detainer requests, scores of cities, counties, and states nationwide are choosing to preserve their own much-needed resources for local priorities by refusing to allow ICE to dictate who should be detained in local detention facilities. In a growing number of jurisdictions across the country, state or local laws direct law enforcement agencies not to respond to ICE's detainer requests, or to comply with detainer requests only in limited circumstances.

For example, after the Galarza decision, Lehigh County passed a binding resolution stating that "the Lehigh County Department of Corrections shall release the subject of a detainer from County custody, unless the Lehigh County Department of Corrections receives a judicially-issued detainer, warrant or order." County of Lehigh, Pennsylvania, Resolution No. 2014-36. Similarly, the San Miguel County Sheriff's Office in Colorado recently adopted a policy under which "ICE agents will be required to file an arrest warrant, signed by a U.S. Magistrate, with the Sheriff's office before the Sheriff will detain a federal prisoner." In Newark, New Jersey, a police department directive issued in 2013 simply directs all department personnel to decline ICE detainer requests.

ACLU of Pennsylvania Model Policy on Immigration Detainers
August 2014

WHEREAS 8 C.F.R. § 287.7 authorizes Immigration and Customs Enforcement Agency (ICE) agents to issue a detainer for the purpose of advising a local law enforcement agency that ICE is interested in a person in the custody of such agency, and to request that the agency hold that person for up to 48 hours, excluding weekends and federal holidays, after the person is otherwise entitled to be released from the criminal justice system;

WHEREAS, in Galarza v. Szalczyk, No. 12-3991, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit ruled that detainers issued under 8 C.F.R. § 287.7 are not mandatory orders, but merely non-binding requests;

WHEREAS the U.S. Constitution guarantees the right not to be imprisoned without probable cause and due process of law;

WHEREAS the constitutional protections against imprisonment without probable cause and due process of law and the ruling in Galarza v. Szalczyk concerning the permissive nature of detainers issued under 8 C.F.R. § 287.7 make no distinction based upon a person's criminal history or the criminal offense for which a person has been arrested or charged;

WHEREAS [Your County] respects the rule of law, as well as the civil rights and liberties of our residents;

WHEREAS [Your County] has a fiduciary responsibility to its constituents; and

WHEREAS the federal government does not reimburse local law enforcement agencies for the costs involved in complying with detainer requests issued pursuant to 8 C.F.R. § 287.7, such as detention costs or the costs of legal defense and legal liability arising from an erroneously-issued detainer;

BE IT NOW RESOLVED BY THE [County policymaking body] THAT:

The following is the policy of [Your County] with respect to immigration detainers:

1. The above clauses are incorporated herein and made a part hereof.
2. County officials shall not detain any individual at the request of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) unless ICE first presents the County with a judicially issued warrant or order authorizing such detention. In particular, County officials shall not arrest, detain, or transport anyone solely on the basis of an immigration detainer or an administrative immigration warrant.
3. Unless acting pursuant to a court order or a legitimate law enforcement purpose that is unrelated to the enforcement of a civil immigration law, no County official shall permit ICE agents access to County facilities or to any person in County custody for investigative interviews or other investigative purposes, or use on-duty time or County resources responding to ICE inquiries or communicating with ICE regarding an inmate's custody status or release date.
4. Any person who alleges a violation of this policy may file a written complaint for investigation with [appropriate County office].

ADOPTED BY THE [County policymaking body] on this ____ day of _____, 2014.
